WEDNESDAY SOMETIMES we may bear a person say that two objeets are "as like as two peas in a pod." That is another way of saying that the objects are so much alike that they cannot > be told apart. Peas in a pod do look a great deal like one another. If we study them with care, we may see small differences in size and shape, but in general they seem as much alike as "identical twins." The peas in one pod may be alike, but many kinds of peas are large or small, rough or smooth. Common garden peas are planted, as a rule, in March, April, May or June. If new plantings are made as the spring goes on, peas can be gathered all through the

For most purposes of human food, peas are gathered while they are green and tender, only two or three months after the seeds are planted. If not gathered for table use, they will become dry, hardened seeds.

Millions of bushels of green peas are put into cans each year In the United States, Wisconsin is the leader in the pea-canning in-dustry. Its factories have produced more cans of peas than all other states combined.

Canada has a big production of "field peas," and peas of this kind also grow well in some
