Jap Commander

According to an official Tokyo radio broadcast, Gen. Kenji Doihara has been appointed Japan's eastern defense commander. The "eastern" defense command would presumably include the area facing the Siberian frontier and possibly parts of China.

Vines Produce New Cucumbers After Small Ones Are Picked

SOME GARDEN plants are like hens of the barnyard. The more you rob a hen of her eggs, the more eggs she will lay. If you stop taking away the eggs, the hen (in proper season) will very likely lay a certain number and then will start sitting on them. Her idea, in that case, is to hatch the eggs, which she can't do when people keep robbing her of them.

The cucumber vine acts in much the same way. If you rob it of small cucumbers, it will produce more and more of them. If the plant could speak, it might say: "I want you to let the fruit grow large enough to produce seeds which will take root next year and grow into new vines."

Thanks to the fact that people have learned the trick of taking away the little cucumbers, the pickling industry has grown. If cucumbers are picked when only an inch or two long, there will be more in the garden when you come a few days later.
