A Transoccan (German) News Agency communique broadcast by Radio Berlin said that a "pause which has now come to an end has given an opportunity for new formation and regrouping of German submarines." The dispatch said that March sinkings — admitted by the Allies to be high-could be credited to the use of sub flotillas or "wolf packs."

Giving the regrouping "pause" as an apparent excuse for failure to maintain the March sinkings. the broadcast added: ". . . The statement indicated another novelty as regards the employment of the German submarine fleet . . . Whether the present regrouping foreshadows a new tactic remains naturally open to question."
