Uncle Ray's Corner

DURING my travels I have seen many persons carry things on their heads, but nowhere else have I seen such experts in this field as in Mexico. While I was living in Mexico City, it was a common, everyday thing to see men on bicycles with large baskets on their heads.

The traffic of Mexico's capital is heavy, and it is a problem for a person to keep out of the way of motor cars when he has nothing else to do but ride a bicycle. Think how much harder it must be to carry a basket on the head while holding the handlebars!

I did not measure any of the baskets, but judged them to be from two and a half feet to three feet long. One day I watched a man as he took a basket from his head after alighting from his bicycle.

He placed the basket on a counter, and I noticed that it was filled with bakery goods—rolls, cakes and so on.

Most Mexicans who are experts in carrying things on their heads are Indians or "mestizos." A mestizo is a person of mixed blood, being partly of Indian descent and partly white.

Late census figures show that Mexico has close to 20,000,000 people. Of this number, it is estimated that about 3,000,000 are of full-blooded Spanish descent, and the 6,000,000 are full-blooded Indians. The rest are mestizos.

When white men first reached this continent, they did not find the Indians "all alike." Tribes of Mexico had different customs than those in the United States and Canada.

The leading tribesmen of Mexico were the Aztecs. Their chief, Montezuma II, ruled as a kind of emperor when the Spaniards arrived in the country.

The Aztecs were well advanced in some of the arts. They used copper tools and had a system of "picture writing." Today there are about 650,000 full-blooded Aztecs in Mexico.

Besides the Aztecs Mexico has Indians of several other kinds. These include about 400,000 of the famous Mayas, 350,000 Zapotecs and 40,000 Tarascans.

Many of the Tarascan Indians live around the Lake of Patzcuaro, and that lake is famed for its "winged boats." The boats are manned by fishermen who go forth to capture fish in nets. Resting on the boat when not in use, the nets may remind a person of the delicate wings of an insect.

FINDS JOB EASY
 SAUGUS, Mass.—(U.P.)—This is the easiest job I've ever been paid for," says Mrs. Viola Andrews, mother of seven children. She's been appointed a railroad-crossing tender for the Boston and Maine railroad, replacing a draftee.
