Pro Grid Teams Become Active With Redskins as Their Leader

Don't look now, but the calm settling upon the professional football world doesn't necessarily preface a storm. But it doesn't mean the boys in the back room are pitching pennies, either.

Strictly interpreted, it's the calm before the All-Star game next month and before intermittent calls from Uncle Sam. The play-for-pay boys are merely doing the paper work for what they hope and insist will be a "colossal" season, despite manpower shortages, travel bans and threatened secession.

Chicago's own Bears set the pace when they announced the signing of big Bob Steuber, the Missouri cracker, who was a half-back of great ability last fall. The rest of the Bears' roster is a question mark, but Ralph Brizzolara, acting business manager while George Halas serves in the Navy, indicated that a list of veterans would be available before long.

One of the Bears' bulwarks, Sid Luckman, will undoubtedly be in the fold after serving some special "T" at Clark Shaughnessy's Pittsburgh University football camp this summer and old reliable like Joe Stydahar, Lee Artoe and Bill Musso also are likely to be on the roster.

The same picture is being painted in the other seven league cities, where old-liners and 4-F's and freshmen still in military reserve will be on hand for the fall opening.

Can't Find Camps

The word is being bandied about, however, that the boys are having trouble finding training camps for preseason drills. Mr. Layden has the answer to that one.

"We've mulled that problem over considerably," the pro grid czar explained, "and the pattern is simple. The clubs will train near home, within 100 miles of their front yards. The Eastern clubs won't move into the West for the season as before, but they have nearby sites already selected."

Hardest "hit" by the 100-mile range will be the state of Wisconsin. Badger fans used to flock to Two Rivers and Superior to catch the Philadelphia Eagles and the New York Giants at work and play. And for diversion they would head for Waukesha and Delafield to watch the Bears, Cardinals and Green Bay Packers. Now, however, the Wisconsin camps will see only the latter three clubs. The Eagles, merged with the Pittsburgh Steelers, will have to locate near Philadelphia and the Giants will have to stick close to Broadway. The Brizzolara-Handler-Lambeau combine will be back in the neighborhood and most of the faces will be familiar.

STORK SLEEPS WHILE STANDING ON ONE LEG

WHAT do storks think of all the warfare which has been going on in Europe? How does it seem to them to have bombs falling around their homes?

Storks cannot tell us what thoughts they may have, but we may guess that they don't like bombs or ack-ack. For years and years they have been in the habit of coming back to the same roof-tops to raise their young. To find those roofs crumbling must be a great shock.

The white stork has the custom of landing on roofs in Holland and Germany. For hundreds of years it has been common in those countries.

People have come to believe that it means good fortune for a pair of the birds to choose the roof of their home as a nesting place. Many families have set up special platforms to help the storks.

The full-grown white stork is about three and a half feet long, from beak to tail. It has wings which are partly black, and the beak and legs are red. Otherwise it is a white bird.

Near the end of winter or early in spring, white storks reach western and northern Europe. Finding their own nest from the year before, if possible, a pair of storks will add a few sticks and reeds. When additions have been made to a nest for 10 or 12 years, it becomes very large, having a thickness of perhaps three feet.

From three to five white eggs are laid in each nest. In the course of time, the baby storks break through their shells and start making their parents busy bringing them something to eat.

Storks eat frogs, lizards, snakes, mice and fish. They seem to be very fond of eels. Canals and marshes supply most of the small animals on which they feed.

Some persons have said that they have "slept standing up" at certain times. Perhaps this does happen now and then, but in the stork world it is a common thing. The stork sleeps while standing on only one leg! The other leg is drawn up to the breast and kept there while the slumbering takes place.

White storks have no song, but they make a clattering noise with their beaks. Sometimes they gather in a group, with much clattering, and it seems as if a public meeting were being held. Perhaps they are saying, about now, "If this bombing doesn't stop, we won't come back here next year!"
