 Received your letter and it was good to hear from you. You asked me to give you the dope on this place but that's out of the question. The position we are in here, necessitates a very strict censorship and what I mean it's really strict. The censors are furnished new razor blades every morning and when they finish a letter, it usually looks like a fine old piece of Irish lace. I really believe they descend from a long line of paper-doll cutters.

I've a bunch of fellows here who are interested in your column. They get a big bang out of it. If I don't get the Journal regularly they start beating their guns to me about it.

What's wrong? Are Bud, Ernie and the rest of the boys down below only working half days? Anyway, give them all my regards.

Had a letter from Frank Mazanet the other day and he tells me he's got to fish three times a week to keep you supplied with trout. I also heard from Dutch Midland and he said he has a hard time keeping you away from the Waves and I don't mean those in Birmingham Bay.

Where did you get the idea How's your golf this year? Wish I was there to get some of that easy dough of yours.

The natives here are a bit on the dark side. Fellow told me he had one of them out the other night he said she closed her eyes and he lost her.

Tell the fellows in the mailing department to get that column of yours down here before these new readers of yours pester me to death.

Regards to everyone in the Wisconsin-Felton Sporting Goods store and my best to Don Anderson. I suppose Bailey pops every now and then. Have one for me.

Sincerely,
 Bill Kelley, Sp. 1-C U. S. N. R.

MONKEYS which live on the ground!

That is one way to describe the baboons. They are real monkeys, but they seldom go into trees.

The ancestors of baboons may have lived in trees, but now these animals roam about valleys, hills and mountains. They run on four legs, very much like dogs.

Baboons are of an entirely different family than dogs, but some of them have heads shaped like those of dogs and are called "dog-faced monkeys." They are rather fierce animals, and can whip dogs of their own size. Indeed cases are known in which a baboon has won a fight against two dogs of its own size.

Dogs are set to guard some of the farms in Africa, and it is while they are on guard that they may have to struggle against baboons. The baboons like to raid farms to get food. Dogs known as "baboon hounds" have been given special training to keep the animals away.

When there are only a few baboons, a pack of baboon hounds may drive them off. Usually, however, baboons travel in large companies. A hundred or more of them may roam about together and raid first one farm and then another. When farmers come out with rifles, a few of the baboons may be killed but most of them scamper to safety.

Baboons attack crops, but they get much of their food in the wilds. They eat great numbers of insects and worms, also the roots, berries and seeds of wild plants.

Artists of ancient Egypt drew pictures showing baboons picking fruit, and letting the fruit drop into baskets which men held up below. The animals also served as watch-dogs.

Many Egyptians looked on one kind of baboon as sacred. The mummies of scores of baboons have been found in tombs in the Nile valley.

Years ago a pet baboon in South Africa proved very helpful to his master. This baboon, known as Jack, was about the size of a collie dog. The master had lost both his legs in an accident. Jack learned to pump water for him, and also would fetch a key for him when it was wanted. Often the baboon would push his master about in a small cart.
