'Smoking Mountain" Ranks Fifth Among North American Peaks

CAN YOU name the five highest mountain peaks in North America? If you can, you can do more than most persons.

Mt. McKinley, to be sure, is the highest of all. Located in Alaska, it rises to a height of close to four miles. Next is Mt. Logan in Canada. The other three peaks are less in Alaska, and Orizaba and Popocatepetl in Mexico. Of all five of those peaks, Popocatepetl is most interesting in some ways. It holds the crater of a volcano, and the volcano may be called "asleep but not dead."

widely known. They are St. Elias,

The name of this peak was given to it by Aztec Indians. It means "Smoking Mountain." The volcano gives off a great deal of smoke, or vapor which looks like smoke.

Many persons call the peak "Old Popo." The Aztecs have a legend that it is a god. When he is angry, he trembles, making an earthquake or sending out a flood of lava.

Old Popo has had 10 important eruptions since Cortez and his Spanish soldiers invaded Mexico four centuries ago. The last of these took place in 1802. Since then the volcano has done little rîses. Some of the soldiers of Cortez climbed the Smoking Mountain. Patches of snow also exist inside They brought down ice to show the crater, but a visitor may see their friends. YOU SAILOR! ALWAYS BRAGGING ABOUT HOW TOUGH YOU ARE-BUT YOU CAN'T TAKE IT
