One kind of Pacific puffin has a feathery tuft above and behind each eye. This kind is known as the "tufted puffin." It is covered almost entirely by blackish feathers, but has a band of white about its head. Its webbed feet are red, and its beak is largely red. Puffins can walk on land, but they walk so awkwardly that we may say they "waddle." They are excellent divers, however, and are

During the latter half of the summer, the Pacific puffins spend their time going southward. Some of them fly 5,000 or 6,000 miles, until they reach a winter home such as Lower California.
