In regard to "merry maids,"

they would not stay merry very long.

I have a feeling, however, that this reader really wants to hear about mermaids. I can hardly tell facts about them, since they belong to a make-believe world, but at least we can go over the myths. The name "mermaid" means "maid of the lake," but the old stories tell of mermaids living in rivers and seas, as well as in lakes. People said they were half-women and half-fish.

A mermaid, as commonly pictured, has a woman's head, with long and beautiful hair. She was supposed to comb her hair from time to time, holding up a mirror with one hand to see what she was doing.

Although it was fancied that mermaids entered rivers and lakes now and then, their chief home was in salt water. Many a tale speaks of sailors being taken by mermaids to live in homes deep down in the sea.
