Movie Market Fight Seen

Dozens of foreign countries, including Nazi Germany, are out to capture motion markets which Hollywood has dominated for the past 20 years, the commerce department has warned.

The warning, pointing to the probabilty of a postwar scramble for film business. was issued by Nathan D. Golden of the department's motion picture unit in the Foreign Commerce Weekly. Noting how the Germans employed "terror films" as a prelude to conquest, Golden said that in decent hands the motion picture industry could "work cogently for good," and added:

"Motion pictures in the postwar world can operate potently as a force for democratization, for humane feeling, for wholesome impulses, no less than for the salutary benefits of recreation. The American film industry may find itself fighting as it never fought be-fore to distribute its products in foreign markets."
