put up our tents, two men to a tent. The tents are rather small, but to set them up in such darkness was something to do. We lost track of our stakes and when we found them, we missed the stakes and pounded our fingers. When we had our tent half up, there was a practice gas attack, and it fell down while we were putting on our gas masks. "After the gas cleared away, we started more, but the same thing happened all over again! By the time we did get the tent up, we felt Brothers Big Top."

Private Paul goes on to tell about a meal he ate in pitch darkness aft-Let me tell what happened one er putting up the tent, and of his adventures in a war game which followed the meal. We do not have space for that now, but I shall give the rest of the letter next time.
