ADA LEONARD

HERE COMES ADA: Madison's first woman operator of a night club last week opened the Uptown club at 119 E. Main st., and will celebrate the fact on Tuesday when an all-girl orchestra plays at her ballroom.

The Uptown's manager is Dorothy Yunk. The Tuesday night attraction will be Ada Leonard's all-girl orchestra. The languorous Leonard has appeared in Madison theaters, but this will be her first dance engagement here. Incidentally, Miss Yunk says that Ada is the only all-girl band ever to play Chicago's Aragon and Trianon ballrooms.

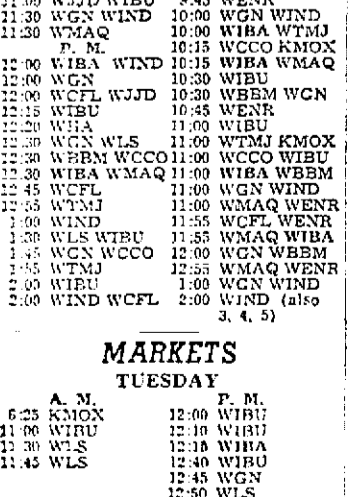

RECORDS: Recent record releases, recommended for revivifying or relaxing: "The Night We Called It a Day," and "Another One of Those Things," recorded by Tommy Dorsey's orchestra; former has a Jo Stafford vocal.

"It Must Be Jelly" and "Rainbow Rhapsody," recorded by Glen Miller's orchestra. "Sentimental Lady" and "A Slip of the Lip," recorded by Duke Ellington's orchestra.

Uncle Ray's Corner

Many of Asia's Mongols Lead Wandering Life. The Mongols of Asia are in large part "riders." Mounted on sturdy Mongolian ponies, they move from place to place with their livestock and tents. Some of them, especially women and children, travel in ox-carts, or even on the backs of oxen.

There is good reason for Mongols to wander about. They live in a region where much of the pasture grass is not very good. When their domestic animals eat up the grass in one section, it is time to go somewhere else.

When Marco Polo was in China six and a half centuries ago, he took note of the wandering tribes, near the edge of the country. Later he said of them: "Their tents are made of a framework of sticks, and are covered with felt cloth. Being round, and nicely put together, they can be gathered into a bundle to carry about."

Mongols in the present day use tents made of felt. This heavy cloth usually is made by matting wool fibers together. Sometimes fur or hair from other animals, such as sheep, is mixed with wool when the matting is done.

Felt is far better than canvas for the purposes of the

Mongolia is mostly a cold and cheerless part of the world, but some of its valleys have good soil and enough rain for crops. The better valleys are in "Inner Mongolia." More than half the land of Mongolia is in the part called "Outer Mongolia" or "the Mongolian republic." Outer Mongolia is closely linked with Russia. (For TRAVEL section of your scrapbook.)
