Short-Wave May Bring Baseball to Men Overseas
 NEW YORK (AP)—President Ford Frick of the National League today endorsed a proposal to send a short-wave broadcast of one major game each day to armed forces abroad and said he would submit it to the regular meeting of major league officials Feb. 5.
 The suggestion was made by Danny J. J. Whittier, St. Louis Cardinals outfielder, who returned this week from a tour of Alaska and Aleutian bases.
 Frick said he believed the army would fund the broadcasts and that he would recommend that the two leagues and the commissioner's office share the expense.
 Surety there have been bold Mongols in history. Swarms of Mongol soldiers used to ride across deserts and mountains to carry on conquest. In the time of Genghis Khan, they invaded Europe and passed the line of the Dnieper river.
 Mongol armies also fought their way into China, and made their capital at Peking for a century. During the reign of Kublai Khan, they were in control of China. That was during the time Marco Polo was in Asia.
 Long before the time of Marco Polo, Mongols seem to have made their way into North America. It is believed that Mongols, or people closely related to them, were among the chief ancestors of American Indians.
 At present the Mongols have land of their own in Asia. Parts of Inner Mongolia have fallen into the hands of the Japanese, but Outer Mongolia remains free. Fear of Russia has made the Japanese careful to keep out of this part of Mongolia.
 Outer Mongolia contains more than half the land of the Mongols, but it is more thinly settled than the other part. Each person in Outer Mongolia has an average of almost two-thirds of a square mile of land!
 The latest figures show that the people of Outer Mongolia have 10,600,000 sheep, 1,500,000 oxen, and 270,000 camels. This is an average of about 13 sheep, two oxen and one-third camel for each human being.
 We have spoken of the wandering habits of Mongols, but some of them have taken to city life. Outer Mongolia has a city called Ulan Bator, and it is the capital of the republic. Some wandering Mongols go there at times to make merry with music and dancing.

Short-Wave May Bring Baseball to Men Overseas
 NEW YORK (AP)—President Ford Frick of the National League today endorsed a proposal to send a short-wave broadcast of one major game each day to armed forces abroad and said he would submit it to the regular meeting of major league officials Feb. 5.
 The suggestion was made by Danny J. J. Whittier, St. Louis Cardinals outfielder, who returned this week from a tour of Alaska and Aleutian bases.
 Frick said he believed the army would fund the broadcasts and that he would recommend that the two leagues and the commissioner's office share the expense.
 Surety there have been bold Mongols in history. Swarms of Mongol soldiers used to ride across deserts and mountains to carry on conquest. In the time of Genghis Khan, they invaded Europe and passed the line of the Dnieper river.
 Mongol armies also fought their way into China, and made their capital at Peking for a century. During the reign of Kublai Khan, they were in control of China. That was during the time Marco Polo was in Asia.
 Long before the time of Marco Polo, Mongols seem to have made their way into North America. It is believed that Mongols, or people closely related to them, were among the chief ancestors of American Indians.
 At present the Mongols have land of their own in Asia. Parts of Inner Mongolia have fallen into the hands of the Japanese, but Outer Mongolia remains free. Fear of Russia has made the Japanese careful to keep out of this part of Mongolia.
 Outer Mongolia contains more than half the land of the Mongols, but it is more thinly settled than the other part. Each person in Outer Mongolia has an average of almost two-thirds of a square mile of land!
 The latest figures show that the people of Outer Mongolia have 10,600,000 sheep, 1,500,000 oxen, and 270,000 camels. This is an average of about 13 sheep, two oxen and one-third camel for each human being.
 We have spoken of the wandering habits of Mongols, but some of them have taken to city life. Outer Mongolia has a city called Ulan Bator, and it is the capital of the republic. Some wandering Mongols go there at times to make merry with music and dancing.
