FROG'S LONG TONGUE RESTS WITH POINT TOWARD THROAT

THERE is a queer kind of tongue in the mouth of a frog. It is very long, and is fastened to the front end of the lower jaw, just inside the lip.

When the tongue is out of sight, it is folded so the front end is at the back of the mouth! It points down the throat! When a fly comes too close to the frog, out comes the tongue in a flash. The sticky tongue folds around the insect, and takes it into the mouth. Down the throat goes the fly, without being chewed. The comlower jaw. The teeth are of little

Spiders and caterpillars also are snapped up by frogs. Any earthworms they can capture are eaten, and in each case the victim is swallowed without being chewed Frogs live on all six of the inhabited continents of the earth, but many islands have none of them. They are fresh-water animals and would die if they stayed long in the ocean's salty water. That explains why they cannot pass freely from island to island.
