Long Lash Makes Eskimo Dog

Cope 1944, Percy L. Crosby, Warld rights reserve

Of all dogs in the world, the Eskimo dog is closest to the wolf. Indeed we may say that it is "largely wolf."

Often called a "husky" by white men, the Eskimo dog is strong and powerful. Eskimos in northern Canada and Alaska would find travel harder if it were not for animals of this kind.

Eskimos start training dogs when they are mere pupples. A little harness is put on, and the puppy strains hard to get back to its mother. By the time it is two or three months old, it is placed in harness with one or more full-grown dogs, and in that way gets used to drawing a sledge.

An old, well-trained Eskimo dog is chosen as the leader for each team which draws a sledge. Where this dog goes, the rest are supposed to follow.
