MOLES USE SNOUTS AND FEET TO BORE THROUGH SOIL

Thousands of mole-nests now ontain baby moles, and many other nests will have them before the end of April. Most of us will not see those little moles, but they are there---in holes in the ground. Often a mole-nest is under a large stone, or below a tree stump. Most of the nests contain from three to five young ones.

Whether they are young or old, moles are seldom to be seen. That is because they spend almost all their time inside the dark earth. They are furry animals which can cut through the ground about as well as worms. Indeed they may make much better speed than a worm; they often "chase" a worm worm, of course, but they may about the size of pinheads!
