Queen Elizabeth Owned Pair of Silk Stockings

During the many years she reigned in England, Queen Elizabeth was a leader of fashion. She was vain about her dress, and one record tells us that she had 3,000 gowns! During some of the years she was on the throne, hardly a month passed that she did not add 20 to 30 new dresses to her wardrobe!

There were changes of style while Elizabeth was buying her dresses, so we cannot describe them in a few words. During one period, the so-called "Farthingale costume" was in favor among women. This included a "wheezy" made of whalebone, which was suspended from the waist. It caused the underskirts, petticoats and skirt to bulge out a great deal.

That costume was a favorite about the year 1575. Along with it the ladies wore a kind of corset made with pieces of wood.

Elizabeth is believed to have been the first woman in England to own a pair of silk stockings.

An English writer of that time told how ruffs were soaked in starch, making them
