Uncle Ray's Corner
POKE BONNET WAS POPULAR CENTURY AGO
The other day I saw a "history fashion parade." Perhaps 25 or 30 women put on costumes such as were worn at different times during the past century. One by one, they marched before the audience, and sometimes the people watching could not help bursting out in laughter.
One merry moment came when "a school teacher of 1895" appeared. She wore a waist with "mutton sleeves" and these made her shoulders appear very broad, indeed. These sleeves bulged out at the top in such a way that the teacher's shoulders seemed to be more than two feet wide!
The "bathing girls of 1912" were a sight to behold. They wore so much clothing that it is a wonder if they were able to swim.
Two or three women showed hats of past times. One hat was very small, and the young woman who wore it carried a tiny sunshade over her head. The sunshade was in the form of an umbrella, but the top spread out only about 12 inches!
Corporal J. Brooks of St. Ives, England, who joined the Royal Air Force before the war and was sent overseas, never saw his five-year-old son who just died in a hospital.
To stimulate agricultural production in Algeria, the French committee of National Liberation has assumed authority to requisition all persons connected with agriculture.

The Peach Basket
The Peach Basket was compared to "a dishpan upside down." In some cases it was adorned with lace or pleated ruffles.
