Rides On Little Train Early in the year 1854, Commodore Matthew Perry returned to Japan. This time he had a fleet of six vessels. With bands playing American music, Perry and 500 of his men marched to "Treaty House" in Yokohoma. Three weeks were spent in meetings on shore while the treaty was being worked out and written down.

During those weeks, the commodore gave Japanese officials a number of presents; which he had brought for them. His gifte were given presents such as dolla baskets and umbrellas, along with 200 sacks of rice and 300 chickens. The treaty provided that Japan would allow trading at two of her seaports. The Japanese also promised good treatment to Americans who might be shipwrecked in the area. In April Perry sailed away from Japan. He had opened the door of trade with the people of the island empire. Later the Japanese started to trade with other nations besides the United States. The Japanese were to learn
