Chesapeake bay has been one of the world's chief oyster centers Oysters were found there by early settlers, and the natural beds were so rich that no one saw a need of "planting" oysters there for a long time. Sixty or seventy years ago it was common for oyster fishermen to gather from 15,000,000 to 20,-000,000 bushels of oysters from that bay in a season.

The great demand for oysters has cut down the supply from natural beds.
