WITH TWO SUITS BID ONE

When you have two suits worth bidding over the opponents' call, it is nearly always well to bid one of them--whichever will make it most readily possible to show the other later. Doubling or passing may mean that you get shut out of a chance to show both of them, and consequently result in your landing in the wrong contract. If you disclose one to your partner on the first chance, you can often safely reveal the other later, as you put him in a position to choose
