

Same Theme Featured By Two Fine Films At State

Again the stage has been set for a magnificent pair of movies and the funny thing about it is that they are based on the very same theme yet differ completely in ideas. This you can easily see in the two movies "Gang Bullets" and "Federal Bullets" which will open Thursday at the State theatre.

With Charles Laughton in the title role as a whimsical spook who sometimes removes his head and carries it jauntily under his arm, and with Margaret O'Brien and Robert Young as his co-stars, "The Canterville Ghost" is rapidly reaching its acme in movie appeal. This great show is now playing at the Ohio theatre.

"When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" begins a song and oh what a song. An Irishman is quite familiar with this song which several years ago completely swept a nation off its feet. Along with many other songs as "Mother Machree," "Boy O' Mine" and "Let the Rest of the World Go By," "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," now the name of a movie at the Quilna theatre, still brings that soothing comfort to a tired heart.

Neglected, because people think more of money than they do of their children, the younger generation, the teen-agers, those unprepared for the heavy trials of life— all must approach the future with two strikes on them before they even get started. What are the adults of the nation going to do? For the answer see "Youth Runs Wild" now playing at the Sigma theatre.

There are as many greenhorns in the west as there are in the east as you can well see in "Ride, Tenderfoot, Ride" which opens Thursday at the Lyric theatre.
