ing the present century.

If we try to explain the changes in color, we may think of clouds around Jupiter. Clouds drifting above the Great Red Spot would make it dim.

A famous astronomer has estimated that Jupiter has a blanket of air around it 6,000 miles deep. This air seems to be very cold, and it differs in some ways from the air around the earth. There is an important amount of "ammonia arms" in it also some methane or
