Long ago people thought of them as "little lights in the "far-away suns." They give out stars are different.

The true stars are hundreds, or thousands, or times as far away as any planet. They do not make trips around the sun, and they give their own light. Before we speak about the size of stars, let us make a note about the size of the sun. The sun has a diameter of 864,000 miles. This is 109 times the diameter of the earth! Glancing at the sun, we might suppose that it had a diameter of only about two feet. It seems small because it is so far away.

On the average it is 93,000,000 miles from the earth, and that is quite a distance to look across.

Now we know that the stars are heat and light, just as our sun f great size. Astronomers have does. All of them are thousands measured many of them, and have of millions of miles from the found that some are smaller than earth, and many are millions of our sun, but that others are larg- trillions of miles distant.

A good winter star group is known as Orion, and it contains the bright star known as Betelgeuse. This star has a reddish tinge, and we may describe its coolor as reddish yellow or yellow-red.

Betelgeuse is so large that toould hold hundreds of objects as large as our sun. If you could put the sun in the center of Betelgeuse, there would be room for the earth, to revolve about the sun and still be inside the star. Of course the earth would be burned up in a hurry if it got in-side Betelgeuse, but that is another matter. (For SCIENCE section of your scrapbook.)
