We never would have believed, until now, that any colored boy ever would turn down a 'possum. But it happened, last week, righ here at Madison's side door!

Clayton Wetmore, civilian em-playe at Truax field, lives be-tween McFarland and Lake Kegonsa, and during his spare time this winter has operated a trapline near his home. We, knowing noth-ing about trapping, were quite sur-prised to learn that he has had better luck with mink than with muskrats this winter, by a ratio of about 8 to 4, but that's inciden-

Early one evening, while making Early one evening, while making the rounds of his traps, he found a little ball of fur curled up on the snowy ground. It was a 'possum, playing dead, as 'possums will, but it was such a puny, starved little thing that Wetmore decided to take it home and feed it up. It can be a such as the beginning of the neuro-psychiatric cases in the provided on the job at various sorts of ided on the proved to be an unexpectedly good feeder and perfectly willing to stick around where food was plenstick around where food was plentiful, but in time it became something of a nuisance and the Wetmores began to think about means more: began to think about means of getting rid of it.

two boys and two dogs, Woodford says, but he didn't learn the names physicia of any of them. It was one dog's birthday, and the youngsters had planned an ice cream treat for him.

Woodford was astonished to find all four sented at soda fountain stools. It isn't legal, the disappointed lads were informed. The two dogs ultimately received their ice cream cones but not at the case of the cones but not at the case of the cones of the case cream cones, but not at the soda

A Madison business man called to New York on business last week, was bewailing his inability to get train reservations when a thoughtful and helpful friend suggested that if he would go to a carpenter and have him make a good dog crate, he might be able to get there by airplane.
