

"This Man's Navy" Playing Now At Sigma Theatre

Popular request has intervened again so that you who have not had the chance to see the pictures, "This Man's Navy," with Wallace Beery, Tom Drake and Jan Clayton, and "Mademoiselle Fifi" will have a little more time in which to do so. They are playing at the Sigma theatre.

The former is a film which depicts the lighter-than-air service of the Navy whose job it is to spot enemy submarines then send them to the floor of the ocean. The men who are found in this service are very seldom heralded for their heroic deeds—in fact—very seldom heard of when the praises are being handed out. The other picture tells the story of a girl who loved France so much that she was willing to sacrifice her life to save its honor.

The team of Abbott and Costello is really three men. Third member is John Grant, one-time burlesque actor and stage manager, who brought the two comedians together and has been associated with their careers ever since. He served with the laugh team for the first time as a producer on "Here Come the Co-Eds" now showing at the Ohio theatre.

For the second time in his long and eventful acting career, Warner Baxter has been typed—and he likes it. Fifteen years ago he created the character of the Cisco Kid in the first outdoor talking picture, "In Old Arizona." It rocketed him to stardom and he was typed in the character for 10 years.

Usually if someone says "Hi! Beautiful!" you can almost depend on the fact that they mean it. Of course it's a rather strange name for a movie but nevertheless that's the name of the one that is to open Thursday at the State theatre. Sharing the billing will be
