Charles Laughton Finds Top Role In "The Suspect"

In his twelfth year as a screen star, Charles Laughton has again found a role he feels will rank with his English butler role in "Ruggles of Red Gap," his Captain Bligh in "Mutiny on the Bounty," or with any other of his long list of outstanding portrayals.

It is the part of Philip Marshall, wife murderer, in the dramatic film, "The Suspect," which will open Thursday at the State theatre with Ella Raines co-starred as Laughton's young second wife, who does not believe that her husband is a murderer. The star, sensing the possibilities of the role, worked at an intense emotional pitch thruout production. The picture is rated by those in the movie know as one of the best films Laughton has ever made.

As a rule, comedians are serious-minded individuals, and film star Peggy Ryan is no exception. The little Irish laugh-maker, who currently is scene-stealing in the new Abbott and Costello comedy, "Here Come the Co-Eds" now at the Ohio theatre, is of a more serious turn of mind than 90 per cent of Hollywood's dramatic and musical stars. Of course, you hardly can notice it after she once gets going as she does in this current movie.

Nowhere in the world is the "star system" in motion pictures more firmly entienched than here in the United States. But fans are even more fanatical in their devotion to a combination of two matchless performers of the wellknown "star team." One of the latest and best examples is the fact that a "Blondie" picture had been made when all plans for the production of such pictures had been dropped. Now you movie fans have a chance to see one of the latest "Blondie" pictures. "Leave It to Blondie" currently is showing at the Quilna theatre.
