MONKEYS DON'T LIKE TREES WHICH GROW ON SLOPES OF ANDES
Monkeys are expert climbers, but they like trees with many branches. Swinging from branch to branch, they can travel quickly from one part of a forest to another. In South America there are trees which monkeys do not like. They are called "monkey puzzle" and it would puzzle a monkey to climb around among them. These Indians have been compared to the Inquils of North America because they are fierce warriors. They were the only tribesmen in Chile who would not give in to the Spanish conquerors. War after war was waged against them, but they kept their freedom. Today they are at peace with the government of Chile, but the control over them is very loose. Monkey puzzle trees have helped supply
