Carbon Dioxide Helps Plants to Stay Alive and Goes Into Soda When limestone is heated and turned into powder, it becomes VGN quicklime. This white powder, be-ing "caustic," has the power of a VGN WIND burning action.

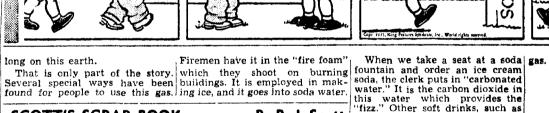

Joseph Black

WIBU Maq Close to two centuries ago, a Scottish student took note of that fact. Limestone itself had no burning action, and he wondered why quicklime had it. The student, Joseph Black, was studying at the University of Ed-inburgh. In 1756 he published a thesis to explain the change. He said that limestone lost a certain gas when it was heated and turned into quicklime. To this gas he gave the name of "fixed air."

Since that time the gas which Black spoke about has come to be known as "carbon dioxide." Some-times it is called "carbonic acid gas." It plays a part in the life of plants.

The air has only three or four parts of carbon dioxide out of 10,-000. People do not need it for it out as waste. Plants need it, however. It is drawn into the leaves of trees, bushes, grass and so on, and is used in making plant
