Invisible Targets Hit by New Plane
BURBANK, Calif. (UP)—A new P-38 Lightning Pathfinder which enables Lightning fighter-bombers to overcome fog, darkness and adverse weather and wipe out invisible enemy targets has been revealed by Lockheed Aircraft Corp., with war department permission.
The Pathfinder, a modified P-38 fighter, carries equipment still not made public but said to be more advanced than that of the "droop-snoot" Lightning which led bomber formations over Germany and carried all the standard bombing and navigational equipment of a heavy bomber.

SCIENTISTS SAY HORSE HAD THREE-TOED FOOT DURING EOCENE EPOCH
From the outside, the hind leg of a horse looks very different from the leg of a man. An inside view of the bones, however, shows that in some ways the two are alike.
Hip bones, thigh bones and lower legs down to the heel are similar. The big difference, is found from the heel down to the toes.
A horse's hoof is the only part of the foot which touches the ground, and we might suppose it to be the entire foot. Yet scientists say that the hoof is only a toe. The rest of the foot in the hind leg stretches upward from 15 to 20 inches, to a joint with bones very much like the heel and ankle bones of a man.

As a horse walks or runs, this joint of a horse's hind leg bends backward. The true knee is farther up the leg.
A man's foot has five toes, and almost all furry animals have four or five toes on each foot. How does it happen that a horse's foot has only one toe, the hoof?
Men of science have studied that question with care. They have found that there are two tiny "splint bones" besides the strong "cannon bone" which leads to the hoof. These splint bones, they say, must be the remains of bones which led to toes of horses long ago.
The study of geology has given hints about the history of the horse's foot. In deep layers of rock, skeletons have been found of animals in the horse family. Some of these, in Eocene rocks, have complete bones for three toes in each foot.
At the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, I have seen an excellent exhibit of the skeleton remains of horses through the ages. Scientists say that at the time it had three toes on each foot, the horse was a small animal, about the size of a fox.
A further question is, "Did the horse have five toes early in its history?" It is believed that in
