Uncle Ray's Corner Desert in Southern Egypt Contains Many Cone-Shaped Mounds

Usually we think of deserts as northern Africa, this mighty sandy wastes, and that is what ert is larger than the United they are to a large extent. Yet States! many deserts contain rock, as well as sand, and there may be more rock than sand.

The Sahara has mountains a mile and a half high, but there are other parts where the ground

one desert with a great deal of rock in it exists in southern Egypt. For many miles south of the town of Korosko, there is a stretch of wasteland with hundreds of cone-shaped hills. These little hills are composed of solid rock, and there is sand between them. When the winds blow, the sand beats against them.

are other parts where the ground is at sea level, or as much as 100 feet below sea level. In certain places, a person may have sandy wastes around him for hundreds of miles in all directions.

The Sahara is classed as a "hot desert," and it surely is hot during the daytime. The sun beats down on the sand, and in the afternoon the sand may be heat-

The rock in that desert is sanded to 150 degrees above zero stone. Bit by bit the cone-shaped hills will be broken down by the heat quickly at night, however, sand which strikes them. In time and scientists have found that pear; the san drifting sand! Sometimes a field of ice is called a desert. The huge island known as Greenland is mostly covered by an "ice desert." Yet it is the sandy wastes
