In Rome, at the same time as the plague, there came a shortage of food. Marcus Aurelius did what he could to see that enough grain was brought into the city. Adding to the troubles of the times, new attacks were made on the northern borders of the Roman empire by the so-called "barbar-ians." To meet this danger, Marcus and Verus led Roman armics northward. During the campaign Verus died from an illness, and Marcus was left as the one and only emperor.

For 11 years longer, Marcus Aurelius remained on the throne. Much of the time he was away from the capital city. He led Roman armies which held the Danube river line against the barbarian tribes. In the Danube area a strange event, a seeming miracle, took place. The Thundering Legion was cut off from the rest of the army. MARCUS FAUSTINA GODDESS
