warmer parts of the ocean. We find them at work off the coasts of such islands as the West Indies, the East Indies and Ceylon. The Persian gulf is another place where pearl oysters are common. Pearl oysters may be gathered by dredging, or by men working indiving suits. Yet the pearl divers I want to describe today are those who go to the bottom without the help of diving suits. Arabs, Hindus and Negroes are among those who go down for the pearls. Wearing very little in the way of a bathing suit, a diver catches hold of a rope, and puts one of of feet through a loop on the top of of a stone. The stone weighs about 40 pounds. It is needed so the man will be able to sink to the bottom without trouble. The oysters are found in beds from 40 to 75 feet below the surface of the water. Men on board the boat let out the rope, and the diver goes down. Commonly he
