to try to conquer a country known about the conquest of Mexico by Cortez, and he was pleased to thirk that another rich land might be won. He allowed Fizarro to go on with his plan.

Sailing once more to the New World, Pizarro reached Panama and made ready for the invasion of Peru. With 132 men and a fleet of three small ves els, he traveled southward over a corner of the Pacific until he reached the coast of the country ruled by the Incas. The conquest of Peru was quick and successful. Three years after the landing was made, a brother of Francisco Pizarro turned up at the court of Charles V. This brother's first name was Hernan
