Surpass Land Craft, Admiral Declares

By DONALD J. GONZALES ABOARD CARRIER MIDAY, 300 Miles East of Cape Chidley, Labrador, Mar. 9—(Delayed)— Rear Admiral John H. Cassady, commander of this sub-Arctic naval expedition, said today that experiments conducted so far "have proved" that carrier planes can operate in far northern areas more effectively than land based Cassady told seven reporters covering the navy's "Operation Frostbite" that no task force commander in time of war would hesitate to take a large carrier force deep into the Arctic for attack or defense.

"Operations of this expedition in the past nine days have proved that planes flying from carriers have a definite advantage over those operating from long land runways covered with snow and severe temperatures," Cassady

As the Admiral spoke, the Midway and her three accompanying destroyers were cruising north-ward at 19 knots some 300 miles. Potatocs: Idaho Russets U S No. 1
