

Randolph Scott To Appear In State Film Due Thursday

Randolph Scott and Ann Dvorak will come to the State theatre in "Abilene Town" Thursday, bringing with them plenty of gun smoke and dust from the western country.

Scott, in the role of a town marshal, plays a humorous, easy-going role while Miss Dvorak adds a fiery temp to the film. Set in the days when pioneers were moving west to establish homes to which to bring their families and of their futile attempts at building farms, the picture brings to the present day some of the glory that was the west's.

Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid again are cast in a stirring picture. It's the story of the Bronte sisters and of one, played by Miss Lupino, whose devotion was so great that it killed her. The film is "Devotion" and now is showing at the Ohio theatre.

Gene Tierney and Dana Andrews are cast in a moving, yet terrifying film being returned by request. Currently showing at the Quilna theatre, "Laura" tells the story of a girl, believed dead, who returns from a brief vacation. All the possible angles for identification of the killer are concealed and the film is certain to please even the most discriminating of movie fans.

George Raft and Ava Gardner turn out a masterful performance in the picture "Whistle Stop" now showing at the Sigma theatre. They do such a fine job in this picture that it is almost a certainty they will again be seen soon in other films.

Opening at the Lyric theatre Friday will be "Frontier Feud" and "Don Juan Quilligan" with William Bendix. The current features at the theatre include "Enchanted Forest" with Brenda Joyce and "Love, Honor and Goodbye" with Virginia Bruce.

"Silver Queen" with George Brent and Priscilla Lane opens at the Allen theatre Wednesday bringing with it some fine acting. Sharing the billing is "Whirlwind Horse" with Ken Maynard.

"Ed" "Archie" Gardner comes forth with another of his inimitable performances, this time on the screen, in "Duffy's Tavern" now playing at the Majestic theatre. The co-feature is "Betrayal of the Cast" a mystery thriller.

after a non-spectacular career as a lyric-writer for night club entertainers, as a little-theatre actor, and as an airplane assembly-line worker.

Before doing "The Story of GI Joe," he played a couple of villains in the Hopalong Cassidy pictures, almost got the title role in "Dillinger," and played a cowboy hero for RKO.

"For a while," he said, "it looked like I was going to be stuck in westerns. I figured out

I could make six a year for 60 years and then retire. I decided I didn't want it. So I started blinking my eyes every time a gun went off in the scenes. That got me out of westerns."

Mitchum is married and has two children, two and five.

He's still trying to get his breath from all the attention he has been receiving lately, and hopes he'll get a raise or a bonus when his option comes up next October. "But if they paid me what I'm worth," he whispered, "I'd starve to death."

A very refreshing character.

Looking At HOLLYWOOD

with ERSKINE JOHNSON

HOLLYWOOD, May 1--(NEA)—Robert Mitchum, a tall, not-too-attractive gentleman, was "in," as they say in Hollywood, when the Ernie Pyle movie, "The Story of GI Joe," reached the screen last year.

The critics raved, the public raved, Hollywood raved and subsequently nominated him for an Academy award. He was a sensation as the bearded Capt. Walker.

But Mitchum was also in the Army at the time, and neither he nor Hollywood could do much about it. But now he's out, and you'll be seeing him in a flock of pictures—as Katharine Hepburn's lover in "Undercurrent," opposite Laraine Day in RKO's "What Nancy Wanted," and in another RKO film, "Till the End of Time."

We caught up with Mitchum over a salad at Lucey's.
