

SAILORS WATCH ATOM MISSILE DEVELOPMENTS

Big Question Mark Hangs Over Capabilities of Newest Weapons

By ED ALLEN
NEW YORK, June 1—(INS)—The self-guided atom missile hung like an enormous question mark over the Eighth Fleet maneuvers which ended at New York this week.

The eyes of the 25,000 sailors on the 29 newest-type ships were on their ship's newspapers, which carried brief bulletins from civilian news sources about the titanic world-wide atomic race.

The official position of the admirals boiled down to this: "All we know is what we read in the ship's newspaper. A bomb in the bay is worth two en route to Bikini."

Over the fleet hung a whole series of spectral threats such as the buzzbat, bumblebee, gorgon, gargoyle, and other unannounced and unnamed weapons.

The planes on deck were powered by traditional gasoline units instead of jet propulsion. There was talk on the radio news broadcasts of wholly-automatic, self-loading, large-caliber anti-aircraft guns.

Pilotless drones, used successfully as targets during the maneuvers, pointed the way toward the day when carrier flying machines may go off the deck without human hands at the controls.

The carriers' dive bombers still went up with an enlisted gunner in the rear cockpit, although it was known that new divebombers are coming off the assembly line with only one cockpit—for the pilot.

The reason is obvious, even to a layman. The free-swinging machine-guns are too inaccurate and pack too little wallop to compete with the new weapons.

Whether or not the Bikini tests show that the present navy is out-of-date, Adm. Marc A. Mitscher "carried on" with the practical attitude that no more mobile fighting force than his has yet been built, and that, anyhow, atom bombs can be launched from carriers.

But even the carriers seemed likely to come in for a little re-designing in anticipation of the new jet planes and other weapons. A speed of 675 MPH is claimed for a British jet-propelled flying wing.

Some Navy men are even talking of eliminating the "island" antiships, and putting all the bridges below the flight deck.

Certain it is that the ships are cramped for space in some divisions, notably in their bridges.

For instance, there is no room at present for the "ionospheric," if, and when self-guided missiles, antiships, and putting all the bridges below the flight deck.

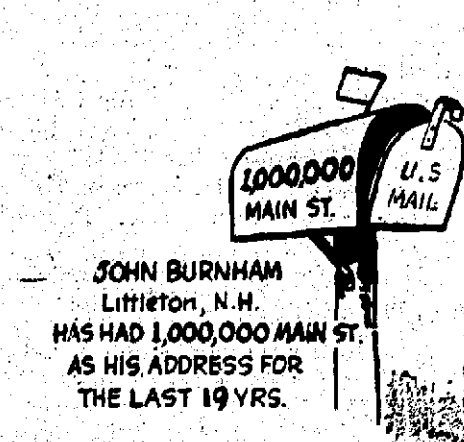

Atomic scientists have estimated that the protective features necessary to shield a power unit capable of propelling an atomobile would weigh from 44 to 55 tons.

NAMED TO STATE POST COLUMBUS, June 1—(INS)—Miss Elizabeth Coffman, of Beley, was appointed today to head the first reference and research department of the Ohio Development and Publicity Commission.

The appointment was announced by Dana O. Taber, executive secretary of the commission, who said establishment of the new department was necessitated by the increasing number of inquiries about Ohio from out of the state.
