But since Judge McCarthy has nailed them as lies and publicly submitted truth and clarification, they ought now to be stifled, hauled down, and laid to rest.

Let there be no more of them.

Failing any honest, pertinent point of question, Judge McCarthys political enemies began howling for his resignation as circuit judge the very second it became apparent he had a chance to dethrone Sen. Robert M. LaFollette.

They quoted (with magnificent misinterpretation) the Wisconsin constitution, which, they thumped, required a circuit judge to resign his office before he could run for U.S. senator.

The office of Building Commissioner

Gordon E. Nelson today disclosed the plight of a Madison man who is building house but can't afford to live in it after it's finished.

The man, reported Inspector Raymond Burt, was compelled to build because he was evicted from the apartment he was occupying and he and his: wife have been "rooming" while awaiting completion of their new home.

When he obtained his permit last spring he estimated the cost at $5,800, but he reported to Burt that the cost now has reached $12,500 and the house still isn't finished.

"I'll have to sell it," he mourned. "I don't make enough dough to live in a don't mone $12,500 house."

Homecoming at Central high school this week has brought out a flock of reminiscenses about the "good old days."

One story, recalled by John Culnan, concerned a thespian experience of the late Bert E. Gill, who was assigned to a onesentence role in a Shakespearean drama. The part was that of a courier, and Bert before the footlights only to receive instructions about carrying a message. His one line was: "I go with all convenient speed."

It was Bert's first appearance on the Central stage, and as he looked out into the black void beyond the footlights he became hypnotized by the 1,000 or more pairs of eyes shining up at him, and his "convenient speed" dragged out for several agonizing seconds before he was able to tear himself away and go about his mission.
