Nazis Still Menace Austria

Underground Works on Long-Range Plan

By GUSTAV HERZOG (Copyright Overseas News Agency) VIENNA—The question is often raised whether the Nazis are still a menace to Austria. Any danger for the moment has been elimi-nated by the fact that many thousands of leading Nazis were arrested by either the Austrian or the Allied authorities. A greater number has been dropped from public offices and influential control of the control of t tial economic and cultural positions. be the case.

In a different category is a statement made to the Overseas News Agency by two high officials of the Austrian state police, which is the political police. They stated that there were two groups of actively working underground from Austria. Not even the police take them seriously.

The second group, however, is really dangerous. These are Nazis who do not work for today or towho do not work for today or to-morrow, but for some years to come. They conceal their identi-ties and their links to Naziism by every possible means.

The main policy of the under-ground is to infiltrate into the political parties. Carefully selected persons are sent into all three parties where, on the basis of their education and intelligence they soon win small but important positions.
