'Push-Button' Talk Faces Curb

Gives Nation False Sense, Military Says

WASHINGTON - (U.P.) - Informed quarters said today the army and navy are taking steps to stop irresponsible statements about "push-button" weapons of which they feel are giving the fore nation a false sense of security.

The two services were reported working on a joint policy statement to guide future discussions by scientists and military experts on such subjects as supersonic planes, guided missiles, and other advanced weapons.

The statement will emphasize that many of these talked-about weapons are still in the drawing board stage, with long years of work remaining before they are perfected.
