HISTORICAL MEDICAL HIGHLIGHTS-NO. 3 BARBER SHOP SURGERY Middle-Ages medical practice was subject to some peculiar conditions. One of them was the fact that barbers were generally used for "blood-letting," a practice then considered beneficial, Religious orders—particularly the Benedictines —largely controlled medicine and pharmacy, but were for-bidden to draw blood—hence, the barber shop surgery. The familiar barber pole traces its origin back to those times... it represented the application of bandages and advertised the service of bleeding.

Present-day pharmacy is a specialized branch of a special-ized field, designed to render service to exacting professional standards. That is why quality is assured when you fill drug needs here.
