Why Grey Doesn't Get Whiter

Public affairs need the voice of the church and its staunchest adherents in stronger volume than ever before today.

And this despite the discouraging fact that when it is raised in councils and forums, it often goes so little heed-

A case in point:

Few months ago, a sturdy group of church representatives voiced a bitter and determined opposition to a legislative bill designed to permit the serving of cocktails in a Madison department store's dining room. They stood the acquisition of liquor in Madison.

Their argument was forceful and apparently impressive. But it might have been more so had
