Once Gay Athens Now Huddles in Poverty, Despair, and Agony

By CONSTANTINE POULOS | bracelets of gold and precious

ATHENS — There has been a rich, full moon over Athens these nights, and in accordance with ancient custom the Acropolis is open at night for love-makers and sonnet-makers to visit, and sit quietly beneath the graceful, soft gray columns of the Parthenon, or look over the walls to the mountains and the sea.

Not much else is the same as before in this 3,000-year-old city. The warm, engaging spirit of the people is slowly being dissipated by fear, despair, and agony.

It is often erroneously said that Athens is not Greece, because life in the provinces is harder and more bitter. Today, life in Athens is hard and bitter, too.

Instead of the pleasing buoyancy and warm-hearted sensitiveness which characterized Athenians of the past there is now suspicion, meanness, and callousbanish their fear of tomorrow, when they must go out and fight against other Greeks, in drink and picion, meanness, and callous-

Gaiety, which used to be synonymous with Athens, is gone, the middle class, the civil service middle class, the civil service was the civil service was the middle class, the civil service was the middle class, the civil service was the civil service was nonymous with Athens, is gone, two monymous with Athens, is gone, two.

At the annual Good Friday procession when the cenotaph of Christ was carried through the central streets of Athens, there were nearly as many policement on duty as there were people watching. "In the contral streets of Braka (Interpretation) and the streets of Picka (The mony) and stopping off at the colorful little taverns for a drink of resinated wine. They were afraid of the police, searching for "suspects."

There are a few blocks around the street out are the homes of the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want to the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir want the middle class, the civil servants and the white colir wants and the white colive the middle class, the civil servants and the white colive the middle class, the civil servants and the white colive the middle class, the civil servants and the white colive the middle class, the civil servants and the white colive the middle class, the civil servants and the white colive them ones, frightened and worried, because they because they because they because fright out a week and so they strength out a week

The war and its aftermath, as look cold and beautiful in their people say, has done many things to Athens. For one thing, it has smart new gowns with the lower hemline,
In the same small area there drawn the lines more sharply. The cleavage between the "haves" and the "have-nots" is greater now than even before in the city's modern past, and it bodes ill for the city's future.

Prosecution Rapped in Sedition Case Finis

WASHINGTON - (U.P.) - The U. S. court of appeals, rebuking the justice department for "lack of diligence" in prosecuting the case, Monday upheld a lower court order dismissing the 1944 mass sedition case.

The federal district court last Dec. 2 had dismissed the government's case against the remain-ing 27 defendants, who had been charged with conspiracy to un-dermine the morale of the armed Defendants included Mrs. Eliza-beth Dilling of Chicago and Wil-liam Dudley Pelley, alleged Silver Shirt leader.
