No amount of bridge knowledge is worth a cent if you are in such a hurry that you don't think about what you are doing. Even the world's greatest players go hay-wire sometimes in the last rubber of the evening if they are hustling to get it through so they can catch their commuters' train. A top-ranker did one of the most ludicrous things possible recently when he placed himself in position to ruff out the losers of a suit, only to realize too late that he hadn't left enough trumps in the dummy to take care of them alt.

Rockets Drop 6th Straight Game

You can hardly blame South for his grand slam bid after hearing his partner had the spade A via the Blackwood convention, that he also could bid spades and furthermore that he had a fit for the diamond suit. But you can find plenty of fault with what South did in the play.
