QUESTIONS

By HASEINS

Q. Is the silver spoon test for mushrooms a safe one?-A. Dr. William S. Thomas, au-ther of "Field Book of Common. Gilled Mushrooms" says of this test: "And as to the old-fashioned silver spoon test by which it was thought that a silver spoon thrust among cooking mushrooms would be quickly tarnished if they were poisonous and remain bright if they were edible, that was long ago proved to be most unreliable by a fatal experiment in which several restons leaf that these beeral persons lost their lives be cause the cook put confidence in it. We are, therefore, forced to conclude that no abstract rule is at present known by which the good can in every case be separated from the

Q. Please give some informa-tion about the Hogarth curve that is used in flower arrange-ments.—E. C. E.

A. The Hogarth curve, a languorous serpentine line forming a lazy S, was publicized by the English artist Hogarth more than 200 years ago and termed by him line of beauty. Hogarth's line has extraordinary grace and movement and is particular ly adapted to upright arrange ments. It may be used in any of its seven graduations in either the upright or the horizontal compositions.

Q. What ending did Frank Stockton have in mind for his femous story "The Lady or the Tiger"?—R. N. V.

A. Biographers relate that the author himself could not make up his mind about the most suitable ending and decided to leave the solution up to the readers. The story was written in 1882.

Q. How large are the faces of the four Presidents that are sculptured in granite on Mt. Rushmore, South Dakota? H. M.

A. The face of Washington measures 60 feet from forehead to chin. The others are compara-ble in size.

L'IORENCE OSBORN has written a new bridge book entitled, "How's Your Bridge Game?," published by Whittlesey House of New York. During my recent illness I had time to look it over, and it is a clever hook. It should be, for Miss Osborn has always been a clever bridge writer.

Although this is her first book, she has been covering bridge tournaments almost as long as I have. You will find the quizzes and the hands in her book unusual and interest-

Today's hand is the first one in the book. Only the North and South hands are shown to start county superintendent of schools with. So if you cover up the to a girl who is hesitating to bewith. So if you cover up the East and West hands, you will have the problem before you. You see that you have two losing spades. Miss Osborn's quiz question is, taking into consideration the opponents' bidding, what is your best chance to make 11 tricks?

What would you play from dummy on the opening lead of the king of diamonds? The ace of diamonds? If so, you would go down to defeat, because East would trump, lead back the king of spades, and when South played the ace, West would trump that. And there still would be no way to keep from losing the spade tricks.

The correct play is to play low on the first diamond, because, as Miss Osborn explains, the strong bidding by East and West makes it quite possible that East may be void of dia-monds. If West continues with they insist on keeping party the queen of diamonds, declarer promises. Even politicians admit should play low again from they get more done for the dummy and trump the trick, money and even have money. Then he picks up the trumps left over after the campaign. Then he picks up the trumps who ever heard of a men's party spades on the ace of diamonds. The property and the property

Miss Osborn points out that this hand cannot be made double dummy. When declarer refuses to play the ace of dia-monds, East can trump with the monds, East can trump with the three of hearts and return the king of spades. When South plays the ace, West trumps. Declarer can throw one spade off on the ace of diamonds, but he still must lose a spade,
