KILLING TERMED 'PASSION CRIME'

NEW HAVEN, June 29 (AP)—Coroner James J. Corrigan today termed the strangulation death of Ida Balboni "a crime of passion."

In a formal finding the coroner held William T. Simjian 21, a murderer criminally responsible for her death on June 11 and said:

"The only question in this case is the degree of homicide."

The coroner said that a lover's quarrel preceded the crime discovered when Miss Balboni's scantily clad body was found in her room.

As a result of the quarrel, said the coroner Simjian "lost his head and when he regained his reason he found himself clutching her by the neck and shaking her violently."

The crime the coroner said was "purely a crime of passion and though murder may in some cases be inferred to be the violence of the attack, it is my opinion that this is not such a case."

The coroner found that Simjian, arrested soon after the discovery of Miss Balboni's body, had on several occasions proposed marriage to her but had been rejected. The girl, he said, had been intimate for some time.

Miss Balboni and Simjian had sex relations, the coroner said, before the quarrel which led to her death. It was touched off the finding said when Miss Balboni told the Marine that she had another engagement for later that evening.
