Why Children Behave Badly?

By ANGELO PATRI

WHEN children do something out of the way, the first thing their elders say is, "Why did you do such a thing?" The child is likely to say, "I don't know," and be quite truthful.

It is always well to search for the reason for a child's behavior. Once it is discovered, we usually have the remedy in our hands. But the reason for little children's impulsive actions often evades our keenest search.

We have to train them in real impulses that drive them to bad behavior by showing our disapproval. That disapproval is not to be a mere "No" but a firm but kindly disapproval, wipe it out.

Because a child displayed an interest in sex, behaved crudely about it may not be anything more than a natural curiosity that needs satisfaction and which a few wise words can set right. Again it may be a trait that needs wise and gentle teaching, the trait seems to take stronger hold, it is time to call in the experts.

But asking "Why?" does no good, says the writer. Why is wrong and right is right, and search for the light in his environment and his changing nature.

Some of Irving Berlin's favorite old songs, together with seven brand new numbers from the pen of this facile composer, are heard in the new M-G-M Technicolor musical, "Easter Parade," which will be the top attraction at the Loew's-Poll theater starting Wednesday.

The songs are sung and danced by a stellar cast topped by Judy Garland, Fred Astaire, Ann Miller and Peter Lawford.

The new numbers include "Better Luck Next Time," sung by Betty Garland; "Happy Easter," "Dumpty Crazy" and "Steppin' Out With My Baby," danced by Fred Astaire; "A Couple of Swells," sung and danced by Astaire and Miss Garland; "A Fella With An Umbrella," sung by Miss Garland and Peter Lawford; and "It Got Happier When I Dance With You," sung by Miss Garland and danced by Astaire and Miss Miller.

Old-time Berlin songs used in the elaborate production include "Michigan," "Everybody's Doing It," "Beautiful Faces," "I Love a Piano," "Snooky O'Kums," "Ragtime Violin," "Alabamas," "Choo Choo," "Shakin' the Blues Away," "Magazine Cover" and the picture's title song, "Easter Parade."
