Answers to Questions

Q. What are the sweetest fruits grown in the United States? A. P. A. The date ranks first and the persimmon second, in sugar content.

Q. Who has supervision of hunting and trapping regulations in Alaska? R. C. G. A. Hunting, fishing and trapping in Alaska are subject to regulations issued and enforced by the Alaska Game Commission of the Department of the Interior. These regulations are designed to preserve the many species of game and fish now abounding in Alaska, from danger of extinction, and at the same time preserve and protect a valuable asset of the territory.

Q. What witty remark did Oliver Herford make when the new Waldorf Hotel was opened? S. R. B. A. The well-known wit remarked that the new hotel was to bring "exclusiveness to the masses."

Q. What is the word that means "exploring of caves"? G. M. A. It is "spelunking." The word comes from the Greek spelling, "of, or pertaining to, caves."

Q. When and where did the punishment of tarring and feathering originate? L. H. A. The practice of tarring and feathering was imposed by an ordinance of Richard I in 1189 as a punishment in the Navy for theft. The first printed use of the term may have been by John Adams in 1774 when he wrote, "I hope a railed away at Boston mobs drowning tea and tarring Malcolm." In the same year T. Hutchinson wrote to George III, "I see they threatened to pitch and feather you. Tarr and feather, may it please Your Majesty."

Q. Which side of the rainbow has the red color? T. McC. A. In the rainbow in the inner or primary bow the colors of the spectrum are arranged in their order, red on the outside and violet on the inside. In the outer or secondary bow the colors are in the reverse order.

SENATOR SOAPER SAYS:

Always when Molotov rehashes the familiar list of charges against the free democracies, we miss the customary disclaimer: "Any resemblance of the matter herein to an existing situation is unintentional."

In spite of urging that it can be dispensed with, the Dewey machine stays. Anything else would be unthinkable as a smooth-faced twit on the cough-drop package.

A letter writer to a New York paper wants all Red's shipped home on cattle boats. But what will this get the dollar-a-pound cow, socially?

A diver finds submerged cities on the bottom of the Mediterranean. Even the high-pressure salesman of low-tide lots in Florida is impressed.

Misguided Europeans in the last fiscal year manufactured $2,000,000 in American money, notwithstanding that the Marshall plan will get the stuff to them wholesale.

A society of English male magicians bars the ladies from membership, and wisely so. Saw women in two, and presently you're outnumbered.

The dealer says sure, he sold uranium to Russia in wartime, as the Red chum produced a prescription signed by Washington and appeared to be in distress.

A children's branch of the Ku Klux Klan is something new. It is for the restless type that begins celebrating Halloween in mid-September.

Tests at the University of Maryland show the co-edi is as healthy on a fish diet as when she eats meat. It is well-established of course that a looker can live for years on dates.

Personally, we never tried for one of those big combination dice give-aways, as it seemed unlikely you could get the 12-foot deep-freeze through the de luxe trailer door.

McKENNEY ON BRIDGE

By WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY

TODAY'S hand was sent to me by Henry Auslander of Pittsburgh, Pa., who is one of the outstanding rubber bridge players of the middle west.

Auslander (South) won the opening lead of the jack of spades with the queen. In order to guard against a four-one break in trumps, he led a small club toward dummy. West played low and dummy's jack held the trick. Auslander then cashed the two high clubs and led a small club, throwing West in the lead.

He knew that one of the two kings was off-side, and to avoid having to guess which one it was, he hoped they were both off-side, knowing that he could develop a squeeze. When West returned the ten of spades, Auslander won with the king and
