New Schools For the Old

By ANGELO PATRI

OUR conception of education must change, and with that change will come the new school, the one we have been working for now for more than a quarter of a century.

Education means fitting one for life, that is for HIS life, the activities he will enjoy, the relationships with people and things about him.

In this country's beginning the people were farmers who raised most of what they used. The families were large and the children helped to do the necessary work on the place, and so supplemented their education gained from books.

Hands are the instruments we have for gaining a knowledge of our world. The land is closely associated with the mind, and the two must work together to enrich the thinking and ability of the learner.

Children must learn early to read, to count, to talk clearly, to write plainly. So far we are at one with the old school. Reading is basic to an education, but reading can be active.

Two representatives of the Bridgeport League of Women Voters were featured speakers at a meeting of the Friendly guild of the Park street Congregational church last night.

Mrs. Laura Osterlund, a member of the League's board of directors, spoke on the topic, "A Citizen's Responsibility in the Election," and Mrs. Sonia Schoplok, also a board member and in charge of booths for the league's "voters' service" project, demonstrated the use of a voting machine.

Britain's newspaper use recently was at 32 per cent of prewar consumption.

Pursuit of Happiness

An Old Man's Pride

Dear Hubbard and Isabelle:

Remember last summer when you were here and we took that back road leading off from Chapel Falls? I showed you the house where Mattie lives and said we ought to stop and visit her. But we never did get to it.

Well, in late August I was near Mattie's, picking blackberries. After filling my pails, I stopped at her house for a drink of water and a chat. Mattie and I know the drink of water is an excuse, there being a grand spring in the pasture. But we continued the harmless deception.

"Where's George?" I asked after we'd discussed the weather, the crops, and I had sampled Mattie's fresh apple pie. George is an old man, seventy-five or more, who lives at Mattie's. He's no relation but Mattie gives him a home and does her best by him.

George has a nephew who lives in the city and pays a small amount of money for board but never comes to see the old man. The money Mattie receives doesn't pay for George's care, but she is very good to him and he knows he can stay there as long as he lives.

"George is getting to be a problem," Mattie said, and a shadow passed over her face. "When he saw you heading for the house, he went up into the garden. I guess he's hiding there."

"No, not in the sense you mean," Mattie said. "George isn't feeble minded or crazy. But he's awfully proud and sensitive. He hasn't had any new clothes for long time. I've made over and made over. But I just don't have the money to buy him a new suit."

"Of course George won't go on welfare," I ventured. "Indeed he won't," snorted Mattie, beating her chocolate cake batter twice as fast. "And I don't want him to. My daughter Alice came to visit last Sunday. She found George hiding in the garden, lying down between the rows of pole beans. Alice almost stepped on him. She got the story from him bit by bit."

"It's a sad thing when an old man hides from his friends because he's ashamed of his patched clothes," I said.

"Yes, it is," said Mattie. "And George loves company. He's happy for days after a good talk, and his memory is wonderful."

So, Hubbard, I borrowed that old brown suit of yours and gave it to George. It took some doing, but Mattie finally managed it. I hope you approve.

I know you would approve if you had seen George last Sunday when I was there. Mattie had done a professional job of cleaning and pressing, and George was on the porch in his new suit, proud as a peacock, waiting to greet me. We had a fine talk.

Naturally, George didn't mention his clothes, but caught Mattie's eyes through the kitchen door. It seemed to me she was spanking the biscuit batter uncommonly hard, and I'm sure a couple of tears fell on it. When I ate the biscuits later on I thought they had a particularly fine flavor.

And that's where your suit has gone—to bolster up an old man's right to pride.

Your country cousins, Rex 'n' Ann

McKENNEY ON BRIDGE TRICKY PLAY MAKES SEVEN HEARTS HERE

By WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY Although I am not a problem fan myself, I know that many people enjoy problems, or double dummy plays. For those who do enjoy them, I am giving you one today that I ran across in a little magazine called "Chatter," published by the Engineers Society of Western Pennsylvania. The problem is to make seven hearts against any possible defense. Let me suggest that you lay all of the cards out on a table, if you want to go to work on it.

The first tip I will give you is that West's opening lead is the queen of spades. Now, if you have spent two hours on the problem and have not found the solution I will tell you that it consists of a coup and a double-squeeze play. The following is the solution, as given in "Chatter."

The queen of spades is trumped by South with the dummy of hearts. He then cashes dummy's ace and king of hearts and discards the three and four of clubs from the South hand. East lets go a diamond on the third spade lead.

At this point we have the first important play. Declarer must cash dummy's ace of diamonds, deliberately setting up the suit for the opponents. Now he ruffs the five of spades. East discarding the eight of diamonds. Next declarer cashes the jack, nine and eight of hearts, getting himself down to the seven of hearts, the four of diamonds and five of clubs.

West gets down to the jack of spades and the king-jack of clubs. Dummy has the eight of spades and ace-six of clubs. East is left with the king of diamonds and queen-nine of clubs (underlined).

Declarer leads the seven of hearts. West has to keep the jack of spades; otherwise he will establish dummy's eight-spot. He throws the jack of clubs, and declarer then discards the eight of spades from dummy. Now East is squeezed. If he discards the king of diamonds, declarer's four-spot will be good. If he discards the nine of clubs, South will lead the five of clubs and win the last two tricks in dummy with the ace and six of clubs.

Preventive Treatment

By HERMAN N. BUENDES, M.D.

MIGRAINE headaches has been called the most common complaint of civilized people. However, this may be, migraine is a frequent complaint, shown by special studies to affect about eight out of every hundred persons.

Migraine, like asthma and a number of other ailments, comes on in periodic bouts. The chief symptom is one-sided headache, accompanied by irritability, sickness at the stomach, vomiting, and constipation or diarrhea. While the pain is usually confined to one side of the head it may shoot downward into both face and neck.

An attack of migraine may be promptly relieved by doses of a drug known as ergotamine tartrate given either by mouth or injection into a muscle. The earlier in the course of an attack the preparation is given, the more rapidly is relief obtained. After the ergotamine is administered, the patient should rest in bed for about two hours. It is better to remain in a dark, quiet room and to take no food or fluids. An ice-bag placed on the head is helpful.

While an attack of migraine may be cut short by this treatment, it is a most difficult matter to prevent an attack or to lengthen the intervals between them. Diet does not seem to be a factor of particular importance in this disease, although there may be a few migraine victims who are allergic or sensitive to certain foods. In such cases, of course, the foods which cause difficulty should be avoided.

Most patients with migraine are intense, driving personalities, who use up a great deal of energy during periods of strain and become over-fatigued. At bottom, they suffer from a feeling of insecurity which drives them to seek perfection in all that they do. Their high standards for themselves and others lead to easy dissatisfaction about their family finances and personal life. Thus, these individuals are predisposed to migraine attacks by their physical and mental make-up. In order to prevent the attacks, it is necessary that the patient understand the underlying cause of his trouble.

Treatment includes reassurance, suggestions, and re-education. In other words, the patient must often be given details of the manner in which he should conduct his work and the time he should take for relaxation and rest. He must be taught to conserve his energy and not waste it in futile brooding and worry for him, as elsewhere, he does a thorough job. After periods of increased work, he should have rest and recreation.

During the first week of this preventive program, the patient may be given phenobarbital, but this drug is used only to aid the patient in changing his habits.

In many instances, migraine disappears after the ages of 45 to 50. This may occur because with increasing age there is a decline in nervous tension. However, in a few instances, middle age may bring increasing difficulties in adjustment to surroundings, with the result that the migraine becomes worse instead of better.
