the President of the United States personally signed government iand patents? N. C. D. A. Until June 17, 1948, the law required the Presidential signature on transfers of public land to private ownership. Actually no President has signed these patents since 1834 when a law was passed authorizing President Jackson to appoint a person to sign his name. Various provisions of law since that time have provided that designated persons sign the President's name. Under the new law the Secretary of the Interior may delegate his authority to sign the patents "in the name of a'gn the patents "in the name of the United States" to assistants in the department or its bu-

It never means the same thing in any two cases. One husband read architectural journals while read architectural journals while his wife read Browning. Result, "Incompatibility." One husband had been highly educated in philosophy, his wife in a business college; one wife wanted a career, husband opposed to "career women"; one likes "tomaytoes," the other likes "tomaytoes," the other likes "tomantoes"—that's incompatibility.... The plot of the story is always the same only with slightly different villians.

Opening—♥ $ By WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY

The lessons in bridge are many and varied, but the most important one of all is to learn to count your tricks. It is around this principle that many other lessons in bridge are built,

'In today's hand, for example, there is the question of reentries, but unless you count your tricks, you are apt to slip up on the hand.

Declarer played dummy's ten of hearts on the opening lead, West won with the king, and gave up the idea of returning the heart sult. He led back the ten of diamonds, trying to knock out the diamond ace. North put on the jack, East the king and dummy's ace won the trick. Now if declarer could successfully.

if declarer could successfully finesse the spades, he could count five spade tricks, a heart, a diamond and two clubs.

But suppose that the spade finesse did not work, how then would he get back into his hand to take the heart finesse? He was almost sure that East had the queen of hearts, as East undoubtedly had led his fourth best and West had won the trick with the king of hearts.

The best line of attack was to The best line of attack was to hope that the king of spades was wrong. Declarer's first play after winning the ace of diamonds was to cash the king and queen of clubs and then lead the three of spades from dummy. If West went in with the king, the past of spades would become the pack of spades would become an entry. If West did not go up with the king, declarer would win the trick with the jack and return the nine of hearts. East would refuse to cover, so declarer would play the eight of hearts that he had carefully saved in dummy. Then he would take another heart finesse.

The seven of diamonds would put West in and now he must either lead a club to the ace or a spade into the ace-queen. Thus, counting your tricks and watching your entries gives you nine
